Tinkertime Parent Handbook

Philosophy

Tinkertime believes children need the time and freedom to explore and learn in a loving, safe and stimulating environment. Tinkertime is a play-based and child-led preschool. We believe children are active learners and thrive in an environment that provides meaningful contextual learning. We understand that education is an ongoing process of learning and is unique to each child. We learn through play with engaging process art, sensory play and outdoor play, gardening, dancing and learning from each other. We are Reggio-inspired and strongly believe that children learn best when they are actively engaged with their environment and use all their senses. We cultivate the ability to wonder, to explore and to discover through our thoughtfully designed space and curated centers and provocations. We have designed our program with an environment that encourages children to freely explore our space. We believe teachers are co-learners and collaborators with the children. Teachers play in partnership with the children to deepen their learning experiences. We believe the environment acts as an additional teacher and should provide authentic and meaningful tasks that encourages children to work together.

Discipline Statement

Tinkertime's approach to discipline is teaching children to express themselves through words. Communication between children is an important social skill. We use redirecting and communication. Building emotional regulation is vital in our program and taught by modeling regulation behaviors and setting clear, reasonable and developmentally appropriate expectations. We use when/then statements- a statement to encourage a child to accomplish something before going on to something else. A child may need to "take a break" when they have temper-tantrum type behavior and/or is hurting self or others. The child is separated from the group until the child can demonstrate calm behavior and then joins the rest of the group.
